Japanese Black Pines

Candle removal on healthy well-developed trees starts in late April or May. If there are more than four buds, remove the shortest and reduce the longest until buds are of equal length. In early summer remove all but two equal size buds. By late July or August new much shorter buds will emerge and start to elongate. Prune to two buds and shorten those buds to three-quarter of an inch.

Candle removal on developing trees general starts in April or May. Remove all of this year's candle growth beginning with the lower one-third of the tree. Ten days later remove growth on middle one-third and ten days later remove growth from the top-third of the tree. New buds (candles) will appear sometime in late June or July. Treat the new growth with the same procedure as the older developed trees as mentioned above. Shorten candle to 3/4 inch and remove all but two candles.

Needle reduction is done in October by removing the previous year's needles. Do this when needles are dry and pull in direction away from the trunk. In December you may thin this year's needles if necessary for refinement. At apex of the tree leave four to six pairs; in other areas leave eight to ten pairs. Note: This is for a strong well developed tree with many small branches - leave more needles on a developing tree.

A Recent Trip To Japan Bonsai

Two Sunday's ago, Bob and I decided to take a day trip over to see Tak at Japan Bonsai in White Rock. I was wanting to look at some azaleas and hoped the timing was such that they would still be blooming, it's much easier to select stock when you can see what the bloom looks like! I was not disappointed. Not only were many of the azaleas still blooming but Tak was having an open house for some of the Vancouver clubs and was going to be doing a demonstration on a large collected shore pine. There was a barbeque and much of the stock was on sale. Both Bob and I picked up some nice pine stock, he a cute well-formed mugo pine and I a very interesting black pine. I also came away with half a dozen varieties of small satsuki varieties with oodles of potential. The weather was gorgeous, the demo was excellent, all in all it was a great bonsai day.
